

Good Question Saskatchewan looking for your ideas and questions

BY KEVIN WEEDMARK

CBC Saskatchewan has launched a new podcast called "Good Question Saskatchewan." The podcast takes people's questions about anything in Saskatchewan—from weather to food to geography, to history and culture—and tries to answer them

There's just one thing that's needed to keep the podcast rolling: Ouestions.

Podcast producer Nichole Huck and host Leisha Grebinski are on the hunt for questions for the new show.

"Nationally CBC is wanting to do more local podcasts.
We have this format called 'Good Question Saskatchewan.' There's a similar one in Montreal and there's one in PEI as well, and the whole goal is, in some communities, to be a little bit more responsive to whatever the commu-nity wants us to be looking into," explains Huck.

"I think as journalists we have ideas of what we think people are interested in and you get a show every day to do that with too, but this is a little bit more fun because it gives us the opportunity to just be reactive to whatever they actually want. That is why I wanted to reach out to they actually want. That is why I wanted to reach out to you because right now probably some of our CBC listeners know about the podcast and are submitting questions but I'd like to get a wider range of questions from a wider part of the province because it'll just make it richer. "We just thought that there's a real gap in Saskatchewan podcasts right now. There are a few specific to politics or very specific to agriculture or things like that, but there is nothing like this right now as of yet. So we thought that we'd find out if this was something that there's an appetite

we'd find out if this was something that there's an appetite we'd find out if this was something that there's an appetite for here."

"I think that this podcast allows us to tap into the spirit of Saskatchewan," adds Grebinski. "Of course we do that on the radio. It's something that I think we've always felt like we had the opportunity to do. With this format we get to play around a little bit more and instead of following the news of the day, which we both care deeply about, we get to better understand people and places.

"So we're just tapping into the spirit of Saskatchewan and rather than more stories that feed into polarization or conversations that only take place on social media, we get to just see one another as people who love Saskatchewan."

Huck says the podcast can also be helpful to people who are not from Saskatchewan, but who are new to the province or planning to move here, or to people from the province who are feeling homesick and live elsewhere.

"Thinking about how many people are new to the province also, I kind of see this as building a little bit of a toolkit or a beginner's guide to Saskatchewan," says Huck. "Like if you are thinking about moving here, or if you just moved here, or if you moved away and are feeling homesick, this can help.

"My huddy who moved to Toronto was listening to it."

sick, this can help.
"My buddy who moved to Toronto was listening to it because he was feeling homesick and there was that Regina pizza episode and it just made him feel connected again.

"And it's always through that lens of 'What does this tell you about the culture of this place?'And it's fascinating. I think that if you weren't from here, I think you'd have a really good sense of the place and hopefully by the end, when we're done with this podcast, you'll have a really good sense of Saskatchewan, and that's why we need more stories from different parts of the province as well."

The podcast is brand new, launching at the end of January ary.

"We have five or six episodes so far and they'll be dropped weekly on Tuesdays," says Grebinski.

"I want to give you another example of something we're working on right now that is a story as old as time—the ongoing conversation about daylight saving time and how we don't bring forward or roll our clocks back. We've told that story over the years, but it's kind of funny how,

Good Question Saskatchewan host Leisha Grebinski.

for me as someone who's lived here my whole life, I actually couldn't really tell you why.

"So I'm still finding that there's so much to discover about Saskatchewan that you think you know, but do you really know? And they're great conversation starters just about this place.

"Thinking about that story as one that's has been told over and over—I mean Brad Wall campaigned saying 'I'm getting rid of it' in 2007, and we talked about a referendum in 2011 and it didn't happen. But today in 2024, following in 2011 and it didn't happen. But today in 2024, following a year where we saw unprecedented growth in Saskatchewan and so many people moving to Saskatchewan from outside of the country, how does that affect people today? "So I talked to a guy who will be on a future podcast episode about this. He's from India, he works at the university (of Saskatchewan), he connects researchers from all around the globe, he's at VIDO, so a high profile place where a lot of stuff happens. He's lining up meetings in Australia and he's trying to reach his parents back in Australia, and he's trying to reach his parents back home. You wouldn't think an hour would mean much but it throws his life off for a bit. So he's representative of a whole lot of people here who may not have been here that long and are like 'Why don't we follow the rest of the country?'

"We're going to tell you on Good Question Saskatch-

"And another one is bunnyhugs. I will tell you why we call it a bunnyhug because I've done research and Nichole and I found some people who could talk about it and that's just for fun.

"So the podcast is a little explainer about the culture of this place, and hopefully when people listen they feel a sense of belonging and a sense of understanding even if they're just a tourist and they're like, 'What's cool about this place?' They are these little bite-sized stories about Saskatchewan.'

What are some of the questions that have been tackled so far on some of the episodes?

"Nichole has mentioned Regina style pizza. That was our first episode and, wow, if we weren't sure what would resonated with people, Regina pizza sure did," says Gre-

'Because it's not just about the pizza," adds Huck. "It's about the storytelling in the podcast.

"The one character that I got to go meet at Tumblers, the guy who owns Tumblers in Regina, he is just an amazing character. He is so passionate about pizza that he keeps his recipe locked up. Not just his recipe but his spices, and he takes his garbage to an undisclosed location so there's not takes his garbage to an undisclosed location so there's not any business spying. He's just like next level, and I think that people just really resonated with this guy and his passion for this pizza—I mean you love it or hate it, right?

"It's the Greeks that we give credit to because if you go to The Tower restaurant in Estevan, you can get that same style of pizza, but it's the storytelling in it that makes it fun. I think that we're always trying to be a little bit surprising in the storytelling. There's always a little element that makes you go, 'Huh.'

"Kevin, probably every newcomer you talk to who's moved to your part of the province has asked you about winter, right? Like, 'What am I supposed to do in winter? What do other people do in winter?' So we tackled that because it's such a common question that people get, and 'How are we supposed to dress?'

"It's not just about the list on how to do it. It's about people who came from hot countries and they thought refs not just about the list on now to do it. It's about people who came from hot countries and they thought they were going to die at the start of winter. These are the things that made them able to settle and not only accept winter, but embrace winter and become people who love winter. Leisha went and met this new Ghanaian student who's first job was at an ice skating rink and she had to Google what inclement weather was before she started. So it's just that storytelling that makes it special."

Maryfield's In-School Curling program finishes its final year

The Maryfield Curling In-School Program, funded by the "For the Love of Curling" Youth Program, has finished its final year.

The program began in 2021-22 with students from Maryfield School and some home-schooled students participating in home-schooled students participating in eight sessions of on-ice curling instruction at the Maryfield Curling rink.

The final eight sessions, originally slated for the 2022-23 season, were divided with four sessions in 2022-23 and four sessions in 2023-24. This season, 18 students from Grades 6 and 7 spent two bours on the ice, on four separate morns. hours on the ice, on four separate mornings and then 22 students from Grades 3, 4 and 5 took to the ice for two hours of instruction in the afternoons.

The curling instruction was a part of the students Physical Education Program. The sessions were spread out over the winter: December 12, January 11, Feb-ruary 27 and March 12.

Students learned the basic curling slide. They worked through drills that helped them develop a balanced slide, line of delivery, rock release and weight control. Sessions included some work on sweep ing as well. A short off-ice break allowed the instructors to discuss curling termi-nology, game strategy and some curling etiquette with the young curlers. At the end of the last two sessions the students were divided into teams and played two-end games to learn more about the game, scoring and experience shot making in a game setting.

The progress that the students made throughout the three-year program was remarkable. Curling is a lifelong sport and while some of the students may not curl now, or even in their younger adult lives, they will have the basics and can come back to the game when they have the opportunity and time to do so.

Esterhazy Town Council

Talks continue on runoff water near landfill

LOCAL JOURNALISM INITIATIVE REPORTER
Esterhazy Town Council covered a lot of ground at their meeting on March 13. The following were some of the topics discussed on the agenda.

Concerns over drainage water near landfill

It's the season for spring runoff, and some of those annual flows have been getting close to the town landfill. A landowner north of the site in question needed to drain their land, but the resulting path of least resistance sought but the unterview of comments.

their land, but the resulting path of least resistance sought by the water raised concerns.

"For whatever reason, we ended up with the water coming in very, very close proximity of our of our dump," explained Mayor Grant Forster. "Our concern is that this is just regular drainage. If we get a year of huge snow or big rain or something—or just natural erosion—we're going to end up with this water draining through our dump, potentially getting contaminated and then contaminating everything downstream. We don't want to be responsible for that. We're the unwilling victim of them changing the drainage."

The town contacted SaskWater, who in turn met with the landowner, ultimately asking to allow for the rising waters to pass.

"Without a doubt, the town is not going to be interested to engage in any type of drainage outside of the town that's engage in the operation of our landfill," said sgoing to cause issues to the operation of our landfill," said Andrew Hickey, the town's waterworks consultant.

He was seeking more background on the issue from council in order to hold further discussion with the Water Security Agency and the Ministry of Environment.

Security Agency and the Numbery of tenvironment.
"They start flooding off that quarter section, just to the east, and the culverts on the RM road are not big enough, so they have the potential to flood our landfill," explained councillor Vern Petracek. "The environmental impact that will be on it would be phenomenal."

Signing off to allow the flow would indicate the town beincreasengible for water safety downstream.

signing or to allow the now would macate the town being responsible for water safety downstream.

"So if it happens, that we contaminate the water source going towards the valley, who's liable?" Petracek asked.

One alternative would be diverting the runoff to the east side of the landfill where more area exists to handle the ca-Pacity.

Hickey will continue discussions with the aforementioned entities, stressing the importance of an alternate solution and that council is not interested in accepting the increased potential for flooding in the landfill.

Town eyeing new water meters

A new water meter system has council seriously considering a major upgrade. The new meters would utilize equipment and technology from Metercorp, who specialize in smart metering solutions for municipalities.

Forster noted council had conversations with Metercorp last year during the SUMA convention, with follow-up conversations happening more recently.

"Over the last couple of months, we've had a couple of discussions with them whereby they made a proposal to us where they will come in and change all of our meters for us and essentially manage the system," Forster said. Everything from installation, meter reading and even billing would be handled by Metercorp through digital me-

"Basically, they're going to pay for everything. They're going to maintain it for 20 years and they'll take a percentage of every water meter bill that's sent out for the next 20 years," Hickey told council. "I think it's a great idea for a community of this size, I think the technology is very neat and it's well used.

Antennas would be installed on tall structures such as the water tower and flour mill, which would collect and the water tower and from filling, winter would confect and then feed data back to the main system—likely based at the Town Office—then relayed to Metercorp. Forster estimates such a system would likely run §1.8 to §2 million to estab-lish from scratch, making the 20-year payment plan with Metercorp far more enticing.

"It's a pretty good deal, from the surface anyway, without having had the chance to look through it all to see what out having had the chance to look through it all to see what it's all about," Forster said, adding the cost to the town would be a percentage of water usage. "We're very excited about it, and it should in the end be a cost saving for the town, but it will also be a cost saving for a lot of users. The way that this system will operate is we'll be able to bill on actual usage as opposed to billing on estimates."

Hickey pointed to the accuracy and realtime feedback as especially useful.

"The potential to detect water leaks or breaks prior to them surfacing is going to save a ton of money," he said. "We can pinpoint a leak before it becomes apparent."

The digital water meters will also mean town staff no longer need to physically read and catalogue data.

"We send a couple of guys around, and it takes them up-

All those figures are then manually inputted once gath-

That takes a huge weight off that office as well," said CAO Tammy MacDonald.
Further discussion between the town and Metercorp

Town applying for speed sign grant

Town staff are composing a grant application for signage, seeking clarification from council as to their preference. Two key areas have been targeted as prone to drivers speeding and the signs are one way to reduce that habit. Staff narrowed the options down to either side of the highway coming into town or in the school zone. The high-tech way coming into town or in the school zone. The high-tech signs also collect information uploaded to iCloud, providing useful and timely data.

"It tells you how fast people are going, how many vehicles are passing by, all the data,"said Planning & Economic Development Director Crystal Sabo. "I did talk to the RCMP also just to have suggestions of what else we can do, and they did say the radar signs significantly lower the speed. They do help."

to, and they did say the radar signs significantly rower the speed. They do help."

Ultimately, council motioned in favour of placing the signs on the highway with one councillor pointing to another practical use for the collected data.

"I like the highway ones, too," Councillor Randy Bot agreed. "Even if we wanted a new business to come into agreed. Even I we waited a new obsiless to tonie find town or something then we could show the data of how many people drive through town."

The SGI Provincial Traffic Safety Grant provides up to $100,000 per location with a goal of increasing traffic safety awareness. The program itself began in 2019, making use of funds collected from photo speed enforcement tickets.

"We've taken advantage of this before with some other speed signs, and it's an ongoing, continuing program," Forster noted.

Waste collection event planned

The Town received a request from GFL Environmental to hold a waste collection event in Esterhazy. As MacDonald note a waste contection event in Esternazy. As MacDonaid explained to council, GFL would optimally like to set up in the parking lot at the arena, providing an education session as part of the event.

'I'm good with GFL wanting to come in because they're local," Petracek said.

Regional park needs mower

A request to invest in a new mower came before council as the Esterhazy Regional Park & Campground has their eyes on a Toro GreensMaster unit, which will be particularly useful in keeping the golf course in top shape.

"We are in desperate need of a new greens mower," said Councillor Tenille Flick, who brought the request forward. "That is probably our number one complaint about at our golf course, is not the shape of our greens, but the mowing of them.

Through some research by the park board, they found a piece of equipment for $81,000.

"We were wondering if the town would consider provid-ing us a loan for the greens mower," Flick said. "It is seven per cent interest to go with the financing company, so we thought if we could make some sort of arrangement with thought if we could make some sort of arrangement with the town, we would greatly appreciate it because I think it would make a big difference for our course."

She referenced examples of available cash such as hole sponsorships and an unexpected $10,000 in revenue that could assist in paying off the loan quicker.

"We do have user groups that put all their revenue back into the golf course," she said, adding that the board is also focused on running the kitchen, bar and pro shop themselves this year.

"I have absolutely no problem with that " said Bot "The

"I have absolutely no problem with that," said Bot. "The Regional Park does lots for the community and we don't have to do anything. So to help them out with a loan, knowing that we're going to get the money back, it's a no brainer."

Mayor GrantForster and others around the table also voiced their support.

voiced their support.

"From my perspective, it makes sense as well," he said.

"The Regional Park assets are ours, whether we want to say that out loud or not, they belong to the town. So we need to support this. That's that's my take on it."

MacDonald also referenced historical agreements involving the next heirs exits perificial.

ing the park being quite positive.

"If we go on past practices, we've done this before for the Regional Park to help them out, and there were no issues, no problems," she said.

A motion supporting the loan received unanimous agreement from council with MacDonald to draft an agreement between the parties.

Back lane to become one way

A request to review a blind corner exiting onto Main Street near the Pharmasave came before council.

'We've directed Crystal (Sabo) to investigate turning the alley into one way whereas you wouldn't be able to turn onto Main Street from the alley," Forster explained.

"You could turn off of Main Street onto the alley, but you wouldn't be able to turn onto Main Street from it."

Birtail Sioux funded for unique trades program

It's an intense but effective initiative romising to propel participants from having no experience in the trades to being job ready—all in under two weeks.

That's the goal of a new study being funded by the federal government on the Birdtail Sioux Dakota Nation to the tune of $352,500, part of a larger announcement on March 6 that saw Indigenous Natural Resource Partnerships devote a total of $10.4 million to seven mining projects. "Government, over the last two de-cades, has done a pretty darn good job of cades, has done a pretty darn good job of training up Indigenous people and getting them ready for the workforce and the work environment," said Greg Farney, co-founder of Straight Talk Advisory and Training. "The one thing that we've all failed at is we haven't got the workforce ready for the Indigenous people."

STAAT is partnering with BSDN to implement the Indigenous STARS (Strategic Training and Recruitment Solutions) pro-

Training and Recruitment Solutions) program, which has a target goal of reaching out to 80 Indigenous communities across the three prairie provinces. Farney is no stranger to BSDN and has partnered with them previously on other

"We've been working with Birdtail for close to 15 years, probably. So we under-stand each other, and they agreed to be the spoisor. 30 we submitted the proposal to government), it took about six months and then got the funding," he said.

"Birdtail was a natural fit because of their location in Manitoba," Farney explained. "They're right on two mainline corridors being the TranCanada as well as Enbridge's right-of-way. They're right on the corridors of the north-south transmission lines that are projects taking place in Manitoba. It's a very small community, but they've been very proactive, getting engaged both from an employment as well as business perspective in the proj-

Recognizing the need for more people working in the trades is not a new concept, and with a large number of current workers close to retirement, the number of workers close to retirement, the number of job openings will only continue to grow. Some numbers Farney has come across estimates a need for upwards of 56,000 new trades people over the coming decade. "One of the big elements is identifying how many people are out there that want to be involved in the trades," Farney said. "How many people have meaningful employment opportunities at the end of it, which the stats show there should be more than enough."

more than enough."

With the need for meaningful employment established, more than enough room to accommodate an influx of new and motivated workers, plus funding for a program to train them, it was time to link all the pieces together with action.

"So you have this massive opportunity between what the industry needs and what First Nations and Indigenous communities can bring to the industry, but no one's talking to each other," Farney remarked. The cost of training was another huge barrier as traditional methods can easily run thousands of dollars just to become certified in a particular field.

"Unfortunately, what most people don't realize is, if you decide to go to be a bulldozer operator right now, you fork out the $25,000, no one's going to hire you to be an operator right out of the gate," Farney said. "You have to be a greaser and an oiler and all that stuff for six months before they put you on the equipment. So there's a lot of misunderstandin

Enter Indigenous STARS and its fast-

Enter Indigenous STARS and its fast-paced, hands-on approach.

"Through our experience, to get a per-son ready to be an entry-level labourer, for an industrial work environment, that takes about 12 days," Farney said, walk-ing through what a typical training day would look like. "Very intense days. We treat the training as if it's a workday. So you're out of bed bright and early at 6 am. You're at the at the training camp for 7:30 You're at the at the training camp for 7:30 that starts off with a tailgate meeting—like it would in any industrial situation. You're going to learn about what's going to happen that day, what safety hazards to be wise to, all those types of things.

Then we spend about 20 per cent of our time in theory, talking in a classroom environment about what tools are going to be used, what things are going to happen, learning how to do heavy lifts, things like that. And then going out for the balance of the day, hands on full size equipment."

The fast-paced training program has already been tested in other places, effectively posting people in fulfilling careers and changing lives in the process. For BSDN, that means trained carpenters, electricians and plumbers not only being established close to home, but the potential to fill another job shortage in the pro-

Farney pointed to major turnaround and maintenance projects at large-scale facilities such as Suncor (who were looking for 14,000 workers in a turnaround last year). They're short-term, require skilled individuals, and a lot of them.

"You can imagine when you're trying to find 6 000 princitures for six weeks, it's to find 6,000 pipefitters for six weeks, it's pretty tough," he said, noting that current recruitment brings this skilled labour from overseas instead of hiring within Canaoverseas instead of hiring within Cana-da. Utilizing people trained and ready to work through Indigenous STARS for these projects would add bonus income to their already established careers, perhaps even coinciding with a slower season. Given all the pieces aligning, BSDN is certainly poised for great future opportu-nities

Carbon tax hikes unaffordable

After eight years of Justin Trudeau, life has never been

To make matters worse, on April 1, Trudeau will play a cruel joke on Canadians, hiking his carbon tax again—this time by 23 per cent—on gas, heat, and groceries.

This is just one stop on his way to quadruple the carbon tax over the next six years.

Already, Canadians have to pay $700 more for groceries this year, and food banks are expecting another million visits in 2024. Trudeau's decision to quadruple the carbon visits in 2024. Tructed is decision to quadruple the carbon tax is the last thing Canadians need.

Canadians are desperate, and although this tax hike is coming on April 1, this is no joke. Tructeau is once again inflicting misery on Canadians, forcing people to choose between putting food on the table, heating their homes, or filling up their tanks.

My common-sense Conservative colleagues and I have been clear: we will axe the tax on everyone, everywhere for good.

But, until we can have a carbon tax election, Trudeau must listen to common-sense Conservatives, and millions of Canadians, and spike his April Fools' tax hike.

35 traffic tickets

There were 35 traffic tickets in the Broadview Detachment area in the past two weeks. As always, the majority of the fines were for speeding. Only two drivers this week were racing in the Indy 500; coming in first place this week was a speedster drivinfinist place this week was a specuser driv-ing a Mercedes-Benz travelling 172 km/hr on Highway 1 near Grenfell who received a fine of $932. Coming in second place was a male driving a Tesla 3 travelling 161 km/ hr on Highway 1 near Broadview who received a $809 fine.

Just a reminder to all motorists to slow down, and once you get caught going these kinds of speeds, you can almost guarantee that not only will you receive a large fine, but your vehicle will be impounded as well.

Intoxicated female

Assaulted with a clock

On March 3, RCMP attended a residence in Windthorst where an adult male had assaulted another adult male by throwing a clock and striking him. The male was arrested and lodged at the RCMP Bed and Breakfast where he has remained until his court date.

Refused a sobriety test

On March 9, RCMP stopped a vehicle in Broadview and made a mandatory alcohol sobriety demand. The female driver of the vehicle refused to provide a suitable sample of her breath into the roadside screening device and as such was charged with refusing to provide a sample of her breath.

I wanted to take this time to let the public know that impaired charges have changed recently, allowing police officers to make a mandatory demand to obtain a sample of breath even if the person has no signs of impairment. This is usually used in a check stop situation where police officers would not have any driving evidence but this mandatory demand can be made to any driver at any time.

I would also like to advise the public that getting charged with refusal carries the same punishment as being charged with impaired driving.

Age Friendly Moosomin offers Tech Time for seniors every Tuesday

BY DEVONA PUTLAND

Tech Time has been running every Tuesday evening from January to end of April at the South East Regional Library from 6-7:30 pm.

This group proves that one is never too old to learn! This program has been made possible through a grant that Age Friendly Moosomin received under the New Horizons for Seniors program. The first part of the program ran last spring into fall, and a second intake started in January. While the program is designed to teach seniors about technology, some people at the course are much younger. Several McNaughton School students have attended as volunteer assistants or tutors in the program. Along with them are a couple community volunteers as well as members of the Age Friendly Moosomin group. If you have a high school student looking to earn some volunteer hours for their credits at school, this is a great program in which to be involved.

Felicite Mailloux is the formal instructor and each week develops a lesson that is the focus of the evening along develops a lesson that is the focus of the evening along with time for working through individual questions and topics generated by participants. Lesson topics have been about managing contacts, on-line garage sale, photo editing, and managing emails to name a few. If a skill is something a participant already knows or does not think they need, they may miss a week and return the following week. The style of learning fits well with a busy or a retirement schedule.

One of the best things happening in the course is, as more people hear about this course, our group grows. There is always room for one more, so if you or someone you know could use a tutorial in how to use technology, this program continues into spring, and is totally free to

If you don't have a device, there are loaner devices that can be signed out. While Age Friendly can't guarantee adding years to your life, they hope they can add life to your years!

Let's end the stigma

As we all work together to end the stigma surrounding mental illness, now more than ever, every action counts. Whether you take the time to listen to a loved one, encourage a friend to ask for help, or educate yourself about mental health challenges. Be the solution. Be kind. Educate yourself. Listen and ask. Talk about it. Let's change the way we view mental illness. If you or someone you know is struggling, Reach out. If you or someone you know is in crisis or has thoughts of self harm, take action.

For each species, the video shows what the bird looks like, what it sounds like, and what date it arrived in Moosomin last year. From huge honking Canada Geese to tiny ruby-crested kinglets, the video teaches birdwatching beginners how to spot them all.

Participants do not need to photograph the birds to prove that they have seen them; the honour system rules. Participants can record the species they see on an official checklist available at the Moosomin Library or simply make a list. All entries need to be submitted to Gateway Nature (Gateway Nature St@mail com) by June 3rd in Nature (GatewayNatureSK@gmail.com) by June 3rd in time for the prize draw on June 5th.

People are selling these plunge pools, there's people jumping into lakes when it's cold and sharing it on Instagram, but Nichole was thinking about how she was seeing people in Saskatchewan doing it. "So we took this kind of craze around cold plung-ing and applied it to life in Saskatchewan and put a critical lens on it because we're still journalists and wanted to know more. Like what are the benefits and what are the risks? How does this apply to life in Saskatchewan?

"We found people who do it for the emotional ben-efits, and so I loved that efits, and so I loved that episode because it was a surprising take. And we're all scrolling, we all see lots of things online, but then to bring it back home to a place like Saskatchewan, you learn about the people, you learn about how it applies here, and there were just a lot of layers to that just a lot of layers to that story that I don't think you can find anywhere else."

"One of the questions I asked of someone who works outside—he has a pile company and spends most of his winter outside and takes a cold shower in the morning," adds Huck.
"He's like, 'Is there something to this? Why does taking a cold show actually feel better for me to go and be able to work outside for the rest of the day after that?' So he was a bit of a surprising person asking the question, and I think that we were able to think about it in bigger terms too. If people are doing this for resilience, then what does it say about us Saskatchewan people who are always putting ourselves in uncomfortable situations? Does that just build resilience around our area and we as Saskatchewan people?

"So I think it's really fun and I'm hopeful that it's something that people who are taking a road trip in Saskatchewan can just put on in the car with their family. Or if you're driving to work or wherever, you can just put it on and learn something, have some-thing conversational to talk about with people. It's like fun facts about this place that help you understand other people in it." Grebinski says they try to find different ways to answer the various ques-tions, with a heavy focus on storytelling from real Saskatchewan people.

"Experts are part of it, but I think the examples that we just shared really just demonstrate to me that it's about the people. So sure we can find people who know a bit about layering up in winter, and so yes, they are experts, but really the heart of that story was that person's own per-sonal experience and her own sense of adventure in moving here and taking a job that she knew nothing about.

"So yes, there's always someone to call on who has expertise in whatever topic it is that we're pursu-ing, but I really think what I've learned over the past few episodes—and I think Nichole would agree—it's about our neighbors. It's the people who are around us.

"I think we've always known this because both Nichole and I have worked at CBC a long time and we're privileged to talk to people all the time, but there's something special about this."

Questions for the pod-cast can be emailed to goodquestionsask@cbc.ca

As part of the interview for this story, Nichole and Leisha asked Kevin for some ideas for questions for the podcast. Read his column next week for the questions he has.

35 curlers in Maryfield Youth Bonspiel

BY JANET LEMON
The Annual Youth Bonspiel took place in Maryfield on Sunday, March 10 with 35 curlers from Redvers, Elkhorn, Moosomin and Maryfield participating.

The event was open to students Grade 2 and up and there were both full and half sheets events.

Coaches Barb Swallow, Barb Boon, Nikki Erickson and Randy O'Greysik were on hand to help teach strategy and assist the curlers if needed.

Halfway through the day the curlers could select their own prize from a wide variety of prizes offered. A broom signed by Mike McEwan's Saskatchewan team by Mike McKerial's Saskattlewali telli and jerseys from Rachel Erickson, Michelle Englot and Brooklyn Stevenson were also raffled during the event. The day was a great success! The rink kitchen was a busy place and spectators were treated to some interesting shot mak-ing by these oxided participants. ing by these excited participants.
