Living Skies Come Alive fireworks show is back

Fireworks, bands, food trucks, market planned for August long weekend 2025

BY NICOLE TAYLOR

The Living Skies Come Alive fireworks weekend at Moosomin Regional Park is back.

Organizers are planning for fireworks shows on Saturday, August 2 and Sunday, August 3. There will also be bands both nights, food trucks, and a market that weekend, as well as kids activities.

For years, the Living Skies Come Alive fireworks competition attracted thousands of spectators to Moosomin Regional Park each August long weekend until it was cancelled in 2020 due to the pandemic, followed by smaller shows and other events on the August long weekend instead of fireworks.

Kyle Jeannot, with the Moosomin Regional Park board, said the decision was made last week to bring the show back.

"We had a plan to eventually bring back the fireworks, but we made the final decision at the meeting last Tuesday night that it was time," he said. "A lot of people missed the event. People would plan for it every year, and they were disappointed when it wasn't there. We are going to start planning further ahead, get some volunteers lined up, and get it done."

MNP makes $25,000 donation to daycare

BY NICOLE TAYLOR

On Monday, November 18, MNP presented a $25,000 donation to support the construction of a new daycare in Moosomin.

Playfair Daycare is fundraising for the construction of a second daycare in Moosomin. The current daycare has 71 spots, and Playfair Daycare has been approved for an additional 90 spots.

The new building will be constructed on land donated by the Southeast Cornerstone School Division at the south end of the MacLeod School playground.

The team at MNP said they felt that the new daycare would be a beneficial project to donate towards.

"It's a very worthwhile cause. Daycares are important, especially when you are a progressive community like Moosomin," said Corie Wudrick-Mohrbutter with MNP. "You want to make sure you have opportunities for young people, and as a business, we certainly appreciate having a daycare. It affects our team, and our recruiting opportunities. It's difficult to recruit people if you do not have any daycare for young families."

Wudrick-Mohrbutter says that the local Moosomin MNP branch collectively decides what projects they feel would be most important to support.

"Ultimately when it comes to donations, it starts at the ground level, at the local partner office. We discussed as a partner group the importance of having a new daycare facility and it is certainly impacting our existing team members and future team members."

She says the team at MNP feels fortunate to be able to provide such a significant donation to an important cause.

"We are thrilled that we are able to make a donation to the daycare, we are definitely proud that we were able to provide $25,000," says Wudrick-Mohrbutter.

"This donation will make a tremendous difference," said Samantha Campbell with Playfair Daycare.

"MNP is the first major sponsor for the new daycare, and we hope that their support will inspire other businesses, organizations, and individuals to contribute, helping us to get the ball rolling."

The total fundraising goal for the daycare is $3.5 million.

"We need more contributions to begin construction," says Terri Lowe with Playfair Daycare. "While we have secured some sponsors, we are counting on many more donations. We aim to start construction in the spring. Every penny counts."

The committee is encouraging people to support the daycare's ongoing fundraising efforts.

"Our main fundraiser—the Win and Wander trip of the month lottery—is currently underway," said Campbell. "If you haven't purchased a ticket yet, we encourage you to support the project. We're trying to sell 350 tickets before the early bird special ends on Dec. 20, and so far, we've sold about 200 tickets."

Jeannot said the 2025 show will be similar to previous year's Living Skies Come Alive events, featuring food trucks, fireworks, vendors, kids activities and more. "I think it will be as big as previous year's competitions," said Jeannot.

Archangel Fireworks inc, a company based out of Winnipeg, will be managing the 2025 Living Skies Come Alive fireworks competition.

"Archangel is going to bring two different crews in for the competition. They are who we had to do the fireworks last July. Last year we had the smaller fireworks but we are going back to the big one," said Jeannot.

Jeannot explained how once pandemic restrictions had cancelled the annual event in 2020, it became more difficult to get the ball rolling again.

"I think it came down to volunteers. I didn't get on the park board myself until last March, and when I got on the board I found out it wasn't happening. I know it's a huge fundraiser and we definitely noticed it made a difference to the park not doing it."

Jeannot said he knows a lot of people will be excited to hear that the big fireworks competition is back this year.

"I think the reaction will be positive. We have seen so many people drive from hours away only to be disappointed when they arrived and heard that the competition was not happening in previous years."

Jeannot says that their goal is to have at least 3,000 to 4,000 people each night come to watch the competition.

"We want to sell as many tickets as we can. The profits go back into the park upgrades. This past year we did a bunch of updates to the store. We put all new fridges and freezers in the kitchen and re-insulated and heated the back room for storage during the winter."

"We would like to upgrade the marina eventually, and we are looking at expanding the water treatment plant as well. We need another holding tank, we are going through so much water because there's more people out there, so that's the game plan."

A scene from the Living Skies Come Alive fireworks show in 2019 at Moosomin Regional Park. The fireworks are back this year, with two shows planned for the August long weekend along with bands, food trucks, and a market.

Jeannot says that people can show their community support by buying tickets, coming and spending the day at the lake, camping there for the weekend, and spreading the word.

"I feel like if people think about it now, they'll start booking their holidays around the August long weekend."

The lake board is also seeking sponsorships for the event.

"The board is going to go back to when we had sponsorships for this event. I think we are going to reach out and start doing that again and get some corporate advertising and support," said Jeannot.

Jeannot played a part in organizing last year's smaller fireworks show, but this year's will be much larger scale. Jeannot said there's a whole team behind this event making it happen.

"I helped with the one last year and it went pretty smooth, there's lots of good people on the board that have done it for years so they have the experience. Everyone is willing to help and get it done," said Jeannot. "Layne McFarlane, Rob Hanson, Garry Bonkowski, and Karen Hebert are on the entertainment committee, and we also are planning to reach out to more volunteers and recruit a few other people we know are interested in helping out."

Jeannot has also discussed the possibility of hosting a ball tournament that weekend.

Jeannot says that the demand for the competition played a big role in bringing it back this year.

"People keep asking for it, and we want to do these upgrades at the lake store, we need to fundraise somehow. Little fundraising events are good but it's hard to find volunteers to do something every single weekend, then people are burnt out. So if we can put on one big event, and then maybe a couple smaller events this summer, we are going to do that," said Jeannot.

"The impact is huge on the community, you get people staying in the hotels, and coming into town to eat. I think it helps out the community big time."

Jeannot and the Moosomin Regional Park Board are eager to start organizing the next Living Skies Come Alive fireworks competition.

"We've got to get it back, and if we don't, we are going to lose it and someone else is going to capitalize on the fundraiser. It's good for the community and the lake," said Jeannot.

Jeannot also says that Moosomin Regional Park is hosting its Winter Wonderland event in February.

"We are doing the Winter Wonderland this February, which will have an ice fishing derby, sleigh rides, and more fun stuff like that. Right now it's tentatively booked for February 2."

Conexus, Cornerstone, and Synergy Credit Unions exploring merger

Trio could form largest credit union in province

BY RYAN KIEDROWSKI
LOCAL JOURNALISM
INITIATIVE REPORTER

Three credit unions are exploring a merger which would create the province's largest credit union if it were to go ahead. On Nov. 20, Conexus Credit Union, Cornerstone Credit Union, and Synergy Credit Union made public their proposed partnership, using the vision statement 'Together for a Thriving Saskatchewan.'

"We envision a Credit Union that's really more than a financial institution, and we hope that we can be a catalyst for Saskatchewan prosperity," said Conexus Board Chair Ken Kosolofski. "We're going to have an unwavering commitment to our members—both current and future—and we're going to drive economic growth, empower communities, and support the dreams of individuals, farmers, and businesses across the province. That's why our tagline is 'Together for a Thriving Saskatchewan.'"

Should the merger happen, the new credit union would serve more than 198,000 members, employ 1,404 people, and manage around $15 billion in assets. While too early for a name—that will likely be selected from the existing credit unions, then finalized as part of their business case development—the resulting credit union would cover the entire province.

"By being able to capture both on the west side of the province through Synergy and on the east through Cornerstone, they'll just be an extension of our already pretty vast network," explained Conexus CEO, Celina Philpot. "We're used to that environment, and we're looking forward to being able to serve all of our members across the province—from north, south, east, and west."

Now that the merger announcement has been made public, a due diligence business case process will occur, which will take several months. After that, the individual boards would need to vote on the idea, then if the boards are in favour, the membership will have their chance to vote. That membership vote could happen in June 2025, with the merger possibly taking effect by January 1, 2026.

The Conexus Credit Union Moosomin Branch at the corner of Main Street and Broadway Avenue.

"In Saskatchewan, we have a continuous dialogue among our credit unions, and that dialogue continued with the board and management of Conexus, Cornerstone and Synergy, and the alignment of these three credit unions really became evident," Kosolofski said. "We believe the potential partnership is going to benefit all of our stakeholders, members, employees and communities, which was why we decided to move ahead with the business case."

As Philpot noted, the three entities work well together, and she's excited about the future prospect of a merger.

"We're really excited to partner with Cornerstone and Synergy, based on our experience within the province," Philpot said. "We worked together in the past, so this isn't new for us, and we get to know each other very well."

Credit unions are no strangers to mergers, and Philpot believes with the dawn of digital banking, the apprehension around banks joining together does not exist.

"I think as more digitization has come into the sphere, members are used to that and know that they can transact in many ways," she said. "So still supportive of local, but understand service delivery can be done in many different ways."

Kosolofski also stressed that an unwavering commitment throughout the merger process.

"We continue to support the communities that we operate in, and that's the nice thing about a Credit Union," he said. "We're a local base, and we support those communities, so this can only expand that community support and empowerment that we actually have as a base value of our business."

Philpot described Saskatchewan as "a cradle of Credit Unions."

"Saskatchewan is really supportive of a collaborative, co-operative environment," she said. "Understanding it's a very big province, and the people needing to work together in order to make things come to life."

"We continue to support the communities that we operate in, and that's the nice thing about a Credit Union," he said. "We're a local base, and we support those communities, so this can only expand that community support and empowerment that we actually have as a base value of our business."

Lucky Lottery raises $55,000 for rec facilities in Rocanville

BY RYAN KIEDROWSKI

LOCAL JOURNALISM INITIATIVE REPORTER

After paying all the bills, the Rocanville Lucky Lottery will have $55,000 to distribute to local recreation groups. Organizers are pleased with the response to this year's campaign, which netted around $20,000 more than last year.

"There were some tight times there where we were wondering if it was worthwhile, but when you start seeing those final numbers come in and realize what you've done, it's definitely worth it," said board chair Kirby Fowler.

The purpose of the fundraiser is to support recreation facilities in Rocanville, ensuring that programs and infrastructure remains for residents now and in the future.

Now that the Lucky Lottery board knows how much they can share, it's a matter of local groups sending in their funding applications.

"When the January community newsletter goes out, it will have the application in it," Fowler explained. "We'll start accepting applications in January, we'll make those decisions quick and early and hopefully start getting stuff paid out quick."

Since resurrecting the Rocanville Lucky Lottery in 2022, it has drawn supporters from across Saskatchewan and into Manitoba. In its initial year, the fundraiser was able to distribute $86,000 to local groups.

"It was an a nice surprise," said Fowler of learning the final number this year. "The support that we've got from the communities and provincially—we get the support from everywhere, and it's so great to see."

Lots of support for Holiday Smile Cookies

BY RYAN KIEDROWSKI
LOCAL JOURNALISM
INITIATIVE REPORTER

Heading into the weekend, numbers for the annual Holiday Smile Cookie campaign at the Moosomin Tim Horton's were still going strong, even with the first major blast of winter stopping some people from getting to Moosomin last week.

"We are almost the same versus last year," said Moosomin Tim Horton's manager Cherrie Caliwig. "It should be more, but since the highway was closed Tuesday and Wednesday the whole day, that affects the Smile Cookies. Other than that, the Moosomin community is very supportive!"

As of 4 pm on Thursday, Nov. 21, the Moosomin location had sold 4,097 of the special cookies, translating to roughly $6,200 raised for charity. Those numbers are sure to climb as Caliwig noted her staff was preparing for a 64-dozen Holiday Smile Cookie order for the following day.

"The busiest day will be Friday—tomorrow," she said. "And I have a big order tomorrow!"

All funds raised from the sale of the cookies will be split between McNaughton High School for upgrades and the Tim's Camps. Moosomin has gained a reputation for their strong support of the Smile Cookie campaign, with last year's edition of the holiday cookie campaign raising $12,400—the most sales in Saskatchewan.

Holiday Smile Cookies

McNaughton High School students Madison Sebree and Olivia Lawrence were some of the volunteers who decorated Holiday Smile Cookies last week. Proceeds from this year's Holiday Smile Cookies are going toward upgrades at McNaughton High School.

In our opinion:

Manitoba risks students' education by lowering new teacher standards

Judging by Manitoba's growing deficit, math doesn't appear to be the government's strong suit. Now the government seems to want all Manitobans to have equally poor math skills.

Last month, the province quietly removed all subject requirements for entry into a Bachelor of Education program.

No longer will prospective teachers need to complete a prescribed number of courses in "teachable" subjects; in fact, they won't even have to take a single math or English course.

This means that a candidate who took a three-year bachelor's degree in gender studies and then completed a two-year teacher education degree is considered just as qualified to become a teacher as a candidate who completed an honours degree in mathematics, physics, or chemistry. No wonder people are worried.

For example, University of Winnipeg math professor Anna Stokke has long raised the alarm about the declining math skills of Manitoba students. In fact, Stokke played a key role in convincing the previous NDP government to increase the required number of math courses for prospective teachers from one to two in 2015.

Now, the current government is moving in the opposite direction by cutting the required math courses from two to zero. I'm no mathematician, but that looks like a decrease for me.

Sadly, some education professors are completely on board with this change. Martha Koch, an education professor at the University of Manitoba, publicly claimed that requiring students to complete more undergraduate courses in math "sometimes results in worse teachers in early and middle years mathematics."

This comment is a prime example of the anti-knowledge bias pervading North American education faculties.

The last thing faculties of education want is for teachers to be the primary source of knowledge in the classroom.

That is why we cannot trust education faculties. Having taken many undergraduate and graduate education courses myself, I can safely say that most of them are worse than useless. In fact, you get stupider because of taking them.

Don't just take my word for it. Ask any teacher how they felt about their Bachelor of Education program. Chances are they will praise their teaching practicum, where they worked in real classrooms with real students, but they will dismiss most of their required education courses as useless theories.

I shudder to think about prospective teachers taking undergraduate degrees in narrow and esoteric fields such as gender studies and then completing a Bachelor of Education program with courses that promote all the wrong ideas about how students learn.

While those teachers will be ready for social justice activism, they won't have a foggy clue about how to teach real subjects such as math, science, or history.

The reality is that teachers must know the subjects they teach well. Since there is a high probability that early and middle school teachers will teach math at some point, they should complete at least one or two math courses before they are admitted into a faculty of education.

As for high school teachers, it makes sense to expect them to complete a major and a minor in subjects that are taught in Manitoba schools. This shouldn't be too much to ask.

Lowering teacher education standards might get more bodies into school classrooms, but it won't help raise student achievement.

Living Skies fireworks show back next summer!

When Kyle Jeannot called on Wednesday morning, with snow howling outside the front windows of the World-Spectator office in the first mighty blizzard of the winter, my thoughts went straight to summer.

Kyle had news—the Living Skies Come Alive fireworks show at Moosomin Regional Park would be back this summer, with the committee booking two fireworks shows for the August long weekend 2025 at the lake.

It was great news, and just what I needed to hear on a cold winter day. If you had never seen the Living Skies Come Alive fireworks shows then you may not understand just how big this news is. And if you have, then you get it.

The fireworks shows on the August long at Moosomin Lake became so famous that in the end they drew tens of thousands of people through the gates at Moosomin Regional Park. People came from around Canada to see them.

Originally planned as a fundraiser for a new water treatment plant at the park, the shows evolved and got bigger and better every year. They started with some friendly competition between two fireworks companies from Saskatchewan and Manitoba, then morphed into an international competition with the U.S., China and the Philippines all taking part to see who could launch the most jaw dropping fireworks off over the waters of Moosomin lake and wow the crowd the most.

I have been to other international fireworks competitions in major cities like Vancouver and Montreal, and I can tell you that nothing compared to the shows at Moosomin Lake. The event was so big that the competitors wanted to do something special each time, and to this day I have not seen fireworks that good. From a flaming pirate ship on the beach to fireworks never before used in Canada, there were always things at the shows that were next level.

So what happened? Why did the shows fizzle out?

It was the pandemic in 2020 that dealt the first blow, and with a massive volunteer effort needed to keep the shows going each year, the shows fell by the wayside for a big. The lake tried a few other things—food truck wars, bands—but nothing could really replace the fireworks competitions. In fact the competitions were so popular that last summer, when the park board decided to hold an event with some bands on the July long weekend instead, people still showed up on the August long weekend, as it was such a habit.

So when I heard that the fireworks were back, my heart leapt.

Why is it important? Because it was something special and it was something to be extremely proud of. These shows put our area on the map. They also drew thousands of people to the region over the course of the weekend, which is wonderful from both an economic and a tourism standpoint for our area. Could you really ask for better promotion?

It was also something that people enjoyed planning their summers around. Everyone knew that August long at Moosomin Lake was the place to be, myself included. I routinely had family over that weekend, camping in the area or staying with us, to take in the shows. It was an excuse for a big fun get together, and my family always loved making the trip to Moosomin to hang out that weekend and enjoy some summer fun.

That said, the Living Skies Come Alive weekend doesn't just happen with ease. It's a lot of work. And with its return, the Moosomin region now needs to do what the Moosomin region does best and help the committee with the event. Volunteers will be needed that weekend to help man and organize the event, and the more people that step up to help out, the more smoothly the event runs.

As in years past, the fireworks will be combined with some other events that weekend to make it a full weekend of events. There will be bands both nights, and a market, and some kids events as well.

People have been pestering the regional park board for years to bring the event back, and now that it's back, we need to show our support.

The regional park has an ad in this week's paper. If you can help out with this weekend in any way, be it as a volunteer, or if you want to be a vendor at the market, please contact them and let them know how you can help. A committee will be formed to help run the event, and I'm sure any help on that committee will be very much welcome.

We are lucky to have an event like this happening in our area. I'm sure the news of the event being back will spread like wildfire.

Let's give them a show they won't forget!

Let us know what YOU think!

Jury finds Kennedy woman's death accidental

Coroner's inquest held at Kenosee Lake

BY RYAN KIEDROWSKI
LOCAL JOURNALISM INITIATIVE REPORTER
A coroner's inquest into the 2021 death of a Kennedy woman was held at Kenosee Lake last week. Over Nov. 18 and 19, a six-person jury heard from witnesses involved with events that occurred three years prior, ultimately concluding where, when and by what manner the woman died, and compiling a list of six suggestions to two agencies in the interest of preventing future deaths.

On Nov. 8, 2021, Kristin Lee Grant called Broadview RCMP with a complaint about people in her house, just before 9 pm. When police arrived, members found Grant to be agitated, and noticed some injuries on her body. Members attending tried to calm Grant, but she was only becoming more agitated. RCMP felt Grant was becoming a danger to herself, handcuffed her, then placed Grant in the back seat of an RCMP cruiser while waiting for EMS to arrive on scene.

When a first responder did arrive, Grant became unresponsive and lifesaving measures began. Once EMS came on scene, they decided to transport Grant to the Kipling Integrated Health Centre, and continued with resuscitation attempts while en route.

Unfortunately, attempts to revive Grant were not successful and an attending physician pronounced her deceased at the hospital.

An inquest is held by the Chief Coroner whenever a person dies while in custody, unless the coroner is satisfied that the person's death was due entirely to natural causes and was not preventable.

After hearing two days of testimony, the jury established that Grant had died on Nov. 9, 2021 at 2:27 am at the Kipling Integrated Health Centre due to accidental acute methamphetamine toxicity.

They did provide four recommendations to the Saskatchewan Health Authority, being as follows:

1. First responders be allowed to drive the ambulance if they hold a valid driver's license, even if it is not a Class 4.
2. Incentives for first responders/EMS to recruit staff and retain staff in rural areas, i.e. paying for schooling, training and more hours/money for staffing.
3. Ensuring communities with first responders have access to and are supplied with equipment that is required.
4. LUCAS (Lund University Cardiopulmonary Assist System) devices for rural/remote ambulance services dealing with staffing issues.

The jury also had a pair of recommendations for the RCMP, being:

1. Daily inspections of police cruisers, along with the audio and video checked at the beginning of shifts.
2. More access to body cameras for police officers to wear in the field and when responding to calls, to protect both parties involved.

Canada Summer Jobs funding applications open

Deadline is December 19

Cathay Wagantall, Member of Parliament for Yorkton-Melville, would like to advise organizations and businesses that applications for Canada Summer Jobs (CSJ) funding are being accepted until Dec. 19, 2024—Dec. 19 is a much earlier deadline than in previous years. Canada Summer Jobs is an initiative of the Government of Canada's Youth Employment and Skills Strategy, which aims to help all young Canadians develop the skills and gain paid work experience to successfully transition into the labour market.

"In 2024, there were 40 CSJ grant recipients in Yorkton-Melville, and many, many more employers that were approved for fund-ing, but there weren't enough funds to go around," explained Wagantall. "To provide some context, in Yorkton-Melville in 2024, 136 eligible employers applied for $2.3 million in funding to create 404 jobs. The actual distributed amount was $457,000 to 40 employers, which created 116 jobs."

CSJ provides wage subsidies to employers from not-for-profit organizations, the public sector, and private sector organizations with 50 or fewer full-time employees, to create summer work experiences for young people aged 15 to 30 years. Public and private sector employers are eligible to receive funding for up to 50% of the provincial or territorial minimum hourly wage. As in previous years, not-for-profit employers are eligible to receive up to 100% of the provincial territorial minimum hourly wage for each employee.

Job placements will occur during the summer of 2025, with jobs starting as early as April 21, 2025 and ending no later than Aug. 30, 2025. The jobs will need to be full time with a minimum of 30 and a maximum of 40 hours per week, and a duration of six to 16 weeks.

Employers interested in applying for CSJ 2025 funding can submit their applications electronically using either the online fillable application or the Grants and Contributions Online Service. The online fillable application is the fastest way for employers to submit an application online, while the Grants and Contributions Online Service requires the user to create an account before submitting an application for CSJ.

"The deadline for applications for funding is earlier than it was in 2024," said Wagantall. "I urge those who want to apply to ensure that they do so as soon as possible."

Additional information about the program and application information can be found at www.canada.ca/canada-summer-jobs.

Virtual physician program temporary solution for Redvers Health Centre

BY RYAN KIEDROWSKI

LOCAL JOURNALISM INITIATIVE REPORTER

As of Nov. 4, the virtual physician program has been added to the Redvers Health Centre. The program is a temporary solution to help ensure stable emergency health services are available to residents.

"Currently, they are supplementing the two physicians that are full time," explained Joni Wielgoz of the Saskatchewan Health Authority, who added that there are efforts to gain some locum support for the health centre. "We have been successful with that over the last few months, here and there, and then we supplement the rest with the virtual physician, which has been actually working out pretty well."

To have a full complement of doctors, the Redvers facility needs three full-time physicians, with the Saskatchewan International Physician Practice Assessment program as one portion of the recruitment phase.

"That's currently where we were able to recruit our two physicians that are there currently is through the SIPPA program, and we have requested another seat for SIPPA," Wielgoz said. "We're quite hopeful that we will be able to recruit through that program once again to fill that third position."

Wielgoz said that SIPPA is a great program for recruitment, especially for rural and remote areas, but there are some challenges that accompany it as well.

"We only have the three years to make that physician feel welcomed and integrated into the community," she said.

Through SIPPA, there are 307 doctors currently practicing in the province, an estimated 74 per cent of whom have a practice in rural communities. After their three-year contract comes due, the option to stay or move on becomes a tough decision for those physicians. Ultimately, work/life balance often becomes the deciding factor whether or not to remain in a community.

"Our physician's work life balance is incredibly important to consider," Wielgoz said. "I think having that virtual physician option in our back pocket is very impor-

The virtual physician program not only assists doctors, but all levels of healthcare providers.

"The nurses also undergo a lot of extra training in order to support an emergency department utilizing virtual physician," Wielgoz said. "It's important to continue on with their skills, the additional skills that they have for supporting those types of environments. It's important to keep it as part of a regular practice in some of our smaller sites where services are a little bit more difficult to keep consistent. Our goal is to keep the emergency departments open at all times, making sure we have all the tools to do so."

Feedback in Redvers has been positive, with some praising the level of care and timeliness of being seen.

"Some of them have wondered why we didn't do this a long time ago," Wielgoz said. "People didn't know what to expect, but the buy-in now from the staff there is good. They're quite happy to be working with the virtual physicians and being able to continue to provide that emergency department support to our community."

How a virtual physician visit works

Wielgoz walked through how the experience of seeing a virtual physician unfolds. As with an in-person visit, a patient is assessed by a registered nurse using the Canadian Triage Assessment Scale upon arriving to the Emergency Department.

"From the nurses' assessment, they will then consult the virtual physician," Wielgoz explained. "The virtual physician could be anywhere in the province, and from there, the virtual physician will make a decision if the patient requires an immediate transport to another site with a physician there, and they will go by EMS, or the other option would be treatment on site by the RN."

A possible third option in the case of a less-urgent situation would be to come back to the clinic on the following day. For non-emergent health-related questions, people can call the 24/7 HealthLine service by dialling 811.

"Our 811 supports are really good in this province," Wielgoz said. "When a patient does call 811, they are speaking with a registered nurse. That registered nurse does also have access to a physician that she can consult on the phone. So they are getting some really good advice over 811. The end result might be a recommendation for them to seek emergency department support, but they may be able to be guided on the phone also."

Virtual physician services were also introduced in Broadview and Kipling earlier this year.

Rocanville ladies night marks 20 years

New Fortune ladies night Nov. 29 and 30

BY RYAN KIEDROWSKI
LOCAL JOURNALISM INITIATIVE REPORTER

A ladies night in Rocanville is marking 20 years of great food, fellowship, and giving back to the community. The idea is simple—a group of ladies getting together to share a meal and a few laughs.

"We do a Chinese supper, and then we have a gift exchange," explained Joan Tse of the New Fortune Family Restaurant, who has hosted the event since 2016. "And then we have a candy bar and a hot chocolate coffee bar."

There are also various raffle prizes, which in the past have included brand-name purses, watches, and necklaces.

"The money that we make on our raffle, we donate it back into the community," Tse explained. Last year, money raised from the raffle tickets helped a new family to town during their cancer journey. Over the years, the fundraiser has helped people who lost their home, were struggling with food security, or in need of a hotel stay.

"We do it to have fun at the restaurant, make a little bit of money for ourselves, but also to help the community," Tse said.

It's also not uncommon to see the event draw 65 participants, making for a warm evening as the winter weather looms. The annual ladies night draws women from communities surrounding Rocanville as well, and women of all ages.

"We've had ones that are in their '70s and '80s come, and we've had the youngest ones that come in their 20's," she said.

The event has even been known to form lasting friendships, as Tse recounted.

"I met a lady from Houston a couple years ago, her husband had worked at the mine," she recalled. "I got to know her just ordering food, and I invited her for the evening and I got a friend from that."

This year's ladies night happens at the New Fortune Family Restaurant on Nov. 29 and 30 with doors opening at 5 pm, supper at 6:30 pm, and a gift exchange item with a suggested value between $25-30. For more information, contact Joan at (306) 435-7369.
